President's Message

Hello to the NUTS

If you missed the meeting last month, you should kick yourself now. Stan Sanders gave us a personal tour thru six rooms of bottles and other collectables, in two different buildings. It was unbelievable.

We had a lot of fun at Cumberland last month. There were many people there, and most were making some good finds.

This month our meeting will be at the Larry Miller Conference Center. John Eagan will talk to us about how and where to prospect for gold in Utah.

After the meeting, we will set up the tables for the show, which will start the following morning. We also need volunteers to be at the hospitality table during the show. Those who help will earn extra tickets at the Christmas party. Also, don't forget to get your display ready for the show, and give your entry application to Bob Campbell. There are prizes for the best displays.

Dave

CUMBERLAND MEMORIAL

The weather couldn't have been better in Cumberland last month. The nights were chilly; you needed a jacket. The midday sun was almost too warm to be comfortable while digging, but intermittent clouds and fragrant breezes left us with nothing to complain about (unless we happened to be the wrong direction from a dead sheep).

Among the people I saw there were Erick and Robin Hubbard. They showed me a wheat penny they had just picked up. Justin Stanley had a V-nickel and a heart pendant. Brent Montgomery and Rich Stroebel were hunting the area to the north. Dave Rowell complained that he had nothing but brass trinkets and a buffalo nickel until Sunday afternoon when he unearthed two Union Pacific Coal Co. Store tokens, GOOD FOR ONE ELECTRIC BLASTING CAP. Paul Sain didn't show me any artifacts; he was more excited about the possibility of finding tarantula dens. Rich and I picked up two silver rings and a swirl marble. On Sunday, we explored the site of the power plant. The rusted ribs of a giant boiler are still there. This is only a partial account of the many interesting things found over the weekend.

On Saturday evening, just before sunset, a car full of people stopped along the side of the highway and asked if we knew where Cumberland was.

"Yes, It's right here."

They had been over to the Cumberland Cemetery to try to find the graves of some of their relatives. One lady said that her mother had grown up in Cumberland. She said that as far as she knew, all three Cumberlands were in operation at the same time. She said the mines had to be shut down because of a high concentration of explosive gas. Her grandfather lost an ear from one of the explosions.

Please carefully record and preserve all artifacts from Cumberland. They might have once belonged to the man with one ear.

Karen

TRAX, S.L. BUSES Get Tokens

Coins to replace stamps for downtown parking

BY JOHN KEAHEY
THE SALT LAKE TRIBUNE

For years, downtown Salt Lake City businesses have handed out stamps offering free parking at malls and some lots.

Beginning Friday — and just in time for the holiday shopping season — those validations, in the form of a token coin, are being extended to parking meters, and for bus and TRAX rides.

"It's a great step forward," said Mike Allegra, rail-development director for the Utah Transit Authority.

"It allows downtown visitors to decide whether they want to take TRAX, the bus, park their car or use a parking meter."

The program is sponsored by The Downtown Alliance's organization of business owners, Salt Lake City government and the UTA.

For at least the next three years, parking-validation stamps will give way to rolls of nickel-plated brass tokens good for 1 hour in lots or at meters, or one 2-hour block of time on TRAX or buses.

Most downtown retailers and several companies in office buildings will purchase the tokens at $1 each from Zions Bank and distribute them to patrons.

For those shoppers and visitors with the soon-to-be defunct stamps jammed into purses and wallets, "just keep on using them until they are gone," advised Alliance spokeswoman Robyn Carbaugh.

For the 1 hour of parking allowed by each token, parking-lot owners will get 98 cents from Zions, which is handling the program's financial end. The city, when it turns in its tokens, would typically charge users for 1 hour.

The 7-cent difference for the lots and the 25-cent difference for the city will be plowed back into the program for marketing and advertising. Zions is donating its services.

UTA gets $1 back for each token. It is the only organization operating the service at a discount. The typical fare for a 2-hour period to ride buses or light rail is $1.25.

"This is the same discount we offer for bulk [monthly] passes," Allegra said. In exchange, the transit authority hopes the program will encourage new riders to use its expanded system.

UTA and the city had the biggest logistical problems to overcome in adapting to the token program.

UTA employees had to re-program TRAX ticket machines and bus fare-collection boxes to accept the metal token, which is slightly smaller than a quarter.

City workers, meanwhile, spent three weeks electronically and mechanically reconfiguring each of the 1,850 coin boxes on city meters.

Then, they spent this past weekend pasting stickers on meters and on city directions signs that show the token symbol.
